THE ROYAL FUNERALS OF THE HOUSE OF YORK AT WINDSOR

Anne F. Sutton and Livia Visser-Fuchs with Ralph A. Griffiths

This study is a companion volume to the Reburial of Richard Duke of York. It presents in the same format and with five colour and twenty-one black and white illustrations everything that is known about the funerals of Edward IV (1483), Queen Elizabeth Woodville (1503), their son George (1479) and their daughter Mary (1482). Each funeral has an introduction discussing all the details of the ceremony, followed by an edition of the surviving documents. Also included are a study and edition of all the surviving verse laments on the death of Edward, a new discussion of his tomb and chantry in St George's Chapel – what it looked like and where it was situated – and an account of the discovery of his tomb and remains in 1789. Finally there is an up-to-date survey of the many locks of Edward's hair preserved in various collections.

152 pages, 4 pages in full colour, 21 black and white figures and index.

Among the extensive records of the Merchant Taylors' Company of London is a remarkable series of early 'court minutes', proceedings of the Company's governing body, still known today as the Court of Assistants. The minutes which cover the years from 1486 to 1493, convey a vivid and detailed picture of the life of the Merchant Taylors' Company at the end of the fifteenth century. In accounts of more than 400 meetings of the court, the tailors of London are shown electing their Master and Wardens, presenting apprentices, disputing vigorously with their fellow members, enforcing discipline, and making payments for religious services and their almsmen and women. The minutes also reveal the part played by the tailors in the wider life of the City of London, through their dealings with other crafts, the city, government and the Crown. These records are an invaluable source for historians of London and of late-medieval urban society in general and are edited here for the first time. This edition provides a fully translated and annotated version of the text, and includes an extensive introduction, appendices, and a combined index of individuals and subjects.

In 1483 at least six per cent of London's population were alien immigrants. They came in the main from north-west Europe and especially from Holland and Brabant, to live and work in the capital, some for a few years, others for the rest of their lives. Often they brought their families, and they created in the east and west of the city and over the bridge in Southwark, small colonies where they worked, many as artisans in the clothing, leather working and other trades. This study, based mainly on the three alien subsidy rolls which are calendared in the book, those for London in 1483, Middlesex in 1484 and Southwark in 1440, looks at their geographic origins, their social organisation and economic role within London, and poses the question, how did Londoners regard this substantial alien minority. It also gives short biographies of the aliens and their English employers.

The Accounts of William Worsley,
Dean of St Paul's Cathedral, London
1457-1497

Edited by Stephanie Hovland and Hannes Kleineke

The accounts calendared in this volume illustrate the daily life of the household of a senior cleric during a dramatic period of English history.

They shed light on the Dean's everyday life, but also document some extraordinary events, such as Worsley's participation in Edward IV's Scottish campaign of 1481 and his imprisonment in the Tower for his part in Perkin Warbeck's conspiracy in 1495.
